Chartrand defiant

MONTREAL (CUP) — Out of jail for the first time in four months, a bearded Michel Chartrand said he will carry on as before in his "fight against imperialism."

Chartrand, who was released on bail Tuesday, told reporters in the lobby of the Quebec Provincial Police Headquarters: "The labour movement must become increasingly politicized so that one day the people will democratically wrest power from the Ottawa and Quebec puppets of US imperialism."

Chartrand, 53, is president of the Montreal Council of the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

Chartrand said the Quebec and Canadian governments are like those of fascist Spain and the military rulers of Greece "because they jail their intellectuals and poets..."

When asked what he would do after his release, Chartrand said: "I'll make love to my wife Simone, and then I'll continue screaming against injustice."

One of the conditions set by Judge Roger Ouimer in granting bail was that Chartrand would be "cautious" about political statements.

Asked what he would do about the judge's advice, Chartrand said: "Being cautious means doing everything short of killing people... being cautious is being aggressive in order to rectify society's ills."

"Revolution must come from the grass roots"

"Revolution, if it is to occur in Canada, must come from the bottom up, not from the leadership of a revolutionary cadre," a capacity audience in L132 was told yesterday afternoon by Professor Mel Watkins, leading spokesman for the NDP's left-wing Waffle Group.

Offering the alternative of the democratic Left to that of the present "irrelevancy" of the Trudeau government, Watkins developed on the relationship between (national) independence and socialism.

by Rafe Conte

"The capitalist goals of the multinational corporation need to be replaced by social goals," Watkins stressed.

"This can be most readily effected through the process of nationalization similar to that which is now taking place under the Marxist government of Chile."

Watkins went on to explain that the concept of nationalization through remuneration was recognized by international law as entirely legitimate.

The resulting decentralization of power which Watkins foresees, would enable the worker to have a more direct say in his economic destiny.

As it is now, the average citizen is "disenfranchised relative to the giant multinational corporation" because of the "hierarchical and authoritative structure of corporate decision-making."

Several members of the audience raised the point that Canadians would have to sacrifice their standard of living in order to gain economic independence. Watkins took issue with the inevitability of this generally-held assumption. He also cited a recently-taken Gallup poll which indicated that a majority of Canadians would be willing to forsake higher potential standard of living to be free of US economic domination.

Watkins seriously questioned the so-called advantages of American investment and the subsequent growth of the Canadian economy by equating the increased US investment and the rising unemployment situation in Canada.

by Baker

Mel Watkins

He also noted that since the mid-60's, 94 per cent of American 'investment' in Canada was financed by profits realized from Canadian-based companies.

Yong alleges Engineers are "prostitutes"

Dr. Raymond Yong of the Department of Civil Engineering yesterday accused engineers of being "prostitutes".

"How much money will we sell our bodies for — well how about 3 billion, 700 million dollars?" he asked.

That is what an oil pipeline in the North would cost. Yong told the assembled engineering students that men of their profession were "selling their bodies" for that figure.

Yong was very skeptical about how effective a pipeline for shipping oil would be in the north of Canada.

He said that there would be problems with the tremendous pressure of oil flowing through the pipes and high temperature.

by Dave Rovins

Marine Science Center Director, Dr. Maxwell Dunbar, brought up the question of the ecological delicacy of the Arctic region.

He was of the opinion that further research would be required before any danger of ecological unbalance could be proved.

The system is probably quite tough and there is no danger of animal extinction, Dunbar stated.

According to Dunbar, the system developed in Greenland and Russia in their northern regions is far superior to ours. However, Canada is still far ahead of U.S.

Yong and Dunbar were speaking at a seminar on the Canadian North organized by the Engineering Honours Society.

Also participating were Mr. A. Merrill, a member of the Federal Committee on Northern Development and David Hutton, a government mining representative.

Merrill thought the most significant aspect of northern development will be that it will provide employment for the Eskimo population.

He asserted that the Northern part of Canada is a very rich region. It may one day probably support the economy of Canada, he said.

Hutton concentrated on the extensive mining resources in the North. He noted that thirty per cent of Canada's export trade is rooted in the mining business, which now totals five billion dollars.

It is this factor that is a major reason for the high standard of living in this country.

He informed the audience that the Canadian Shield is being heavily explored. The only problem is transportation costs which account for 50 per cent of the total costs of mining operations.

Cultural exchange program set up

by Marsha Fine

The Canadian Bureau for International Education has established two programs which involve cultural exchange between foreign students and Canadians.

The first one, the London Inter-cultural Co-ordination Committee (LINCC), serves to promote intercultural and international understanding between members of the community and students at all levels of education.

The program will work within the London district, with the Office of the Foreign Student Advisor acting as a clearing house for students and teachers.

Basically, the idea is to give foreign students a better understanding of Canada and for these students to exchange knowledge of their cultures through the use of better-organized media.

One of the aims of LINCC is to help London teachers to prepare better courses on countries outside of North America.

Material will be used for public and secondary school students in the hope of helping them to better understand foreign cultures.

Financial support has so far been supplied by the London Board of Education and a local group, the London Agency for International Development. If the programme expands more rapidly than expected, other sources may be sought.

The second program, Interface, is supposed to provide interaction between foreign students and Londoners in a home environment.

Although Londoners have invited students for informal discussion, many meetings have been "unfortunate experiences", students complaining of meaningless discussion and in some cases antagonism.

The Interface organizers feel that previous programmes which have been organized on a social basis, while having some merit, offset the aim of Interface.
